PhD Position

(salary level TV-L E13, 65%)

The Institute of Molecular Medicine at the Martin-Luther-University Halle-Wittenberg is seeking for a highly talented and motivated PhD candidate for a DFG-funded project on inflammatory signaling in keratinocytes. The project deals with the interdependent regulation of intercellular cohesion and inflammatory processes, involving approaches in cell biology, molecular biology, biochemistry, and work with mouse models. The PhD position (E13 TV-L, 65%) is available immediately and limited to three years.

We offer:

- exciting, interdisciplinary research at international level.
- an inspiring scientific environment in the excellent equipped, recently opened Charles-Tanford-Protein-Center at the Weinberg Campus.
- close supervision and mentoring.
- the opportunity to present results at international conferences.

To apply, you must:

- hold a university degree (Master's degree or equivalent) in the fields of life sciences (biology, biochemistry, or related disciplines).
- have strong interest and experience in the field of cell biology, molecular biology and immunology
- be able to work efficiently, independently as well as in a team.
- be highly proficient in spoken and written English.

A FELASA category B certificate or equivalent is a plus, but is not required.

Your application should consist of a motivation letter including a brief statement of research interests, a CV including an overview of techniques and methods used in the past, transcripts or degree certificates, a list of publications/awards, and contact details of two referees. Please submit your full application (in electronic form as a single pdf) until May 31st, 2018 to Dr. René Keil.
